Dante put Muhammad in one of the lowest circles of Hell. At the same time, the medieval Christian poet placed several Islamic philosophers much more honorably in Limbo. Furthermore, it has long been suggested that for much of the basic framework of the Divine Comedy Dante was indebted to apocryphal traditions about a "night journey" taken by Muhammad. Dante scholars have increasingly returned to the question of Islam to explore the often surprising encounters among religious traditions that the Middle Ages afforded. This collection of essays works through what was known of the Qur'an and of Islamic philosophy and science in Dante's day and explores the bases for Dante's images of Muhammad and Ali. It further compels us to look at key instances of engagement among Muslims, Jews, and Christians.

A modern translation of The Book of Arda Viraf. This text is from the Sassanian era of Persian history. It is a story of a man named Viraf who goes into a dream state to record what he sees about the afterlife in Heaven, Purgatory and Hell. His goal is to tell his findings to post-Alexander Persia, and revive the Zoroastrian faith to its former glory. It can be compared to Dante's Divine Comedy.

The Teachings of Zoroaster and the Philosophy of the Parsi Religion Fordham Univ Press

The earlier volume in this series dealt with two religions of Indian origin, namely, Buddhism and Jainism. The Indian religious scene, however, is characterized by not only religions which originated in India but also by religions which entered India from outside India and made their home here. Thus religious life in India has been enlivened throughout its history by the presence of religions of foreign origin on its soil almost from the very time they came into existence. This volume covers three such religions—Zoroastrianism, Judaism, and Islam. In the case of Zoroastrianism, even its very beginnings are intertwined with India, as Zoroastrianism reformed a preexisting religion which had strong links to the Vedic heritage of India. This relationship took on a new dimension when a Zoroastrian community, fearing persecution in Persia after its Arab conquest, sought shelter in western India and ultimately went on to produce India's pioneering nationalist in the figure of Dadabhai Naoroji (1825-1917), also known as the Grand Old Man of India. Jews found refuge in south India after the destruction of the Temple by the Romans in 70 C.E. and have remained a part of the Indian religious scene since then, some even returning to Israel after it was founded in 1948. Islam arrived in Kerala as soon as it was founded and one of the earliest mosques in the history of Islam is found in India. Islam differs from the previously mentioned religions inasmuch as it went on to gain political hegemony over parts of the country for considerable periods of time, which meant that its impact on the religious life of the subcontinent has been greater compared to the other religions. It has also meant that Islam has existed in a religiously plural environment in India for a longer period than elsewhere in the world so that not only has Islam left a mark on India, India has also left its mark on it. Indeed all the three religions covered in this volume share this dual feature, that they have profoundly influenced Indian religious life and have also in turn been profoundly influenced by their presence in India.

Ardā Wirāz Nāmag or the Book of the Righteous Wirāz is an outstanding example of Iranian apocalyptic literature. It is in the Middle Persian (Pahlavi) language and was written probably during the later period of the Sasanian dynasty (AD 226-650). The Zoroastrian priests chose a man called Wirāz, the most righteous among them, to go to the spiritual realm to discover the truth of the religion. This book, first published in 1986, contains the observations of Wirāz' divine journey and his description of heaven and hell. The basic MS. is K20 (Royal Library of Copenhagen) which is carefully compared with other MSS. The MS. is printed in facsimile, followed by transliteration and transcription following the MS. closely line by line. A full translation is given, and a commentary is included together with a glossary, bibliography and index.

Bundahishn, meaning "Primal Creation", is the name traditionally given to an encyclopaedic collection of Zoroastrian cosmogony and cosmology written in Book Pahlavi. The original name of the work is not known. Although the Bundahishn draws on the Avesta and develops ideas alluded to in those texts, it is not itself scripture. The content reflects Zoroastrian scripture, which, in turn, reflects both ancient Zoroastrian and pre-Zoroastrian beliefs. In some cases, the text alludes to contingencies of post-7th century Islam in Iran, and in yet other cases, such as the idea that the Moon is farther than the stars, it reiterates scripture even though science had, by then, determined otherwise.

The Book of Arda Viraf Yale University Press

The Book of Arda Viraf is partly mythology and partly Dantesque Devine Comedy. During the Sasanians Empire, a Zoroastrian priest is sent to the afterlife to bring news from the heavens and hells. During the reign of Ardashir Papakan, the assembly of Mazdaysnian priests sent a young priest as a messenger to the otherworld to bring back news of the afterlife. He observes that when a pious man dies, a beautiful, voluptuous maiden welcomes him. Yet, the wrongdoer is greeted by a lean-hipped, debauched woman while a stinking cold wind blows from the direction of demons. There's no fire in Zoroastrian hell to keep you straight, but as we read from Horne's introduction to this book: "So profound, even to this day, is the Parsis' faith in the reality of Viraf's vision that when the work is read in their religious assemblies, the men weep, and the women cry out in horror over its pictures of the damned. It has certainly a powerful influence in restraining the Parsis from sin."

Dante and Islam

Self-Pahlavi student Zeke Kassock has created a modern rendition of The Book Of Arda Viraf for the beginner Pahlavi student, as well as the Zoroastrian reader. Kassock has hand written the original text, and modernized the spelling with D.N. MacKenzie's A Concise Pahlavi Dictionary. It was then typed, retranscribed and translated using MacKenzie's dictionary, giving it new life from Dastur Hoshangji Jamaspji's translation from 1872. This rendition was created for the student learning Pahlavi/Middle Persian in aiding them in starting to read original Arda Viraf manuscripts. It is presented in Pahlavi script, along with transcription in English letters and English translation. The Book Of Arda Viraf is a Zoroastrian story dating back to Sassanian times. After the invasion of Alexander, the religion of Persia was weakened, and the chief priests searched for the holiest man alive. Arda Viraf was chosen to go into a dream state, learn the truth of Heaven and Hell, and bring that knowledge back to the world of the living. He gives descriptions of rewards and punishments, and recalls the events the souls did to receive their afterlife. It can be compared to Dante's Divine Comedy.

Unlike some other reproductions of classic texts (1) We have not used OCR(Optical Character Recognition), as this leads to bad quality books with introduced typos. (2) In books where there are images such as portraits, maps, sketches etc We have endeavoured to keep the quality of these images, so they represent accurately the original artefact. Although occasionally there may be certain imperfections with these old texts, we feel they deserve to be made available for future generations to enjoy.
